FOR RICHER, FOR POORER

Money is the number one culprit in marital misunderstandings. Knowing how to talk about money matters before and during marriage can help forge a lasting relationship.*

fiancés & finances™

29% of men prefer answering questions about their partners personal appearance rather than talking about money.

27% of couples regularly argue when they discuss their finances.

32% of couples lie to their partners about how much they spend on their credit cards.

35% of couples are kept awake at night worrying about their financial situation.

43% of couples lie to each other about how much they spend on luxuries for themselves.

“Solveable financial differences are usually the province of newlyweds, rather than longer-term couples. What’s most important, is that you work as a team and express your concerns, needs ... before coming up with a plan.”

- John Gottman

The Seven Principles for Making Marriage Work

Money can be a complicated, unintentional controlling mechanism in a relationship. We notice couples fail to communicate properly or at all when it comes to financial decisions. Often the result is a poor decision or no decision. fiancés & finances™ was develop because we know it is often hard to speak about money with your fiancé or spouse. We want to provide you the tools you need to live a happy and prosperous life together.
